Parkway Trees, Lawn Trees: What's The Difference?

Parkway trees are located in the land between the sidewalk and the street (see graphic below). These trees are in front of and/or along the side of the home, depending on if the home is a corner lot or not.

Parkway trees were implemented in Castle Hills to give streets a canopy effect as these trees continue to grow.

Lawn trees (or 'private' trees) are planted within the actual lawn of the property (not in the parkway).

All estate trees are requirements of the Castle Hills Landscape Design Guidelines, however, each phase of the community differs in tree requirement specifics, and some areas do not have parkway trees, but only lawn trees.

All estate trees are the responsibility of the homeowner should they need trimming or replacement.

The tree trimming service that is offered by the Castle Hills Master Association (CHMA) is for the parkway trees only, and does not include the lawn trees. This trimming services aids in the upward growth of the parkway trees, and helps keep them limbed up to a 7ft-8ft clearance of the streets and sidewalks.

Only the lower branches are pruned AS NEEDED at the discretion of the landscape crew. The trees will not be shaped, thinned out or otherwise manicured. If a more detailed service is desired, residents may make those arrangements separately from this trimming service, with any vendor they wish.

The landscape crew doing the trimming service CANNOT accommodate any special requests!

This service is done during the winter months (November to February), and there is no set schedule to relay as the community is large and the landscape company will be processing phases as they go. If you have additional questions regarding the parkway tree trimming, please contact us at: hoa@castlehills.org

True Blue: New Chief Talks Castle Hills Focus

After more than two decades of policing in North Texas, Lewisville Police Departments newly appointed Police Chief Brook Rollins knew he could lead an empowered force for a safe, collaborative community. As it turned out, Lewisville was just that place. Rollins took the helm in February after finding his new home in Castle Hills.

“I didn't apply to many other places. I was very selective about where I wanted to work,” Rollins said.

As a Coppell High School graduate, Rollins is no stranger to the area. In his younger days Rollins could frequently be found hanging around Vista Ridge Mall, and like so many other teens of the time, he shares the ubiquitous standard transmission driving education in the mall's parking lot.

“So, I had some familiarity geographically with the area, and I knew that I would enjoy it,” he said. “It's got the lake, it's got this is a largely residential neighborhood, and I really like the ability to be close to people and not businesses. You know, you get to other cities that are more commercial.”

In fact, that residential atmosphere is the perfect fit for Rollins' policing style. So, make no mistake, Rollins isn't using Lewisville as a steppingstone. Despite multiple degrees, certifications, and experience in several police divisions, he set out to serve a city that could benefit from his skill set and allow a synergistic police force.

“I'm not going anywhere. I don't want to go be the next big city police chief, and I know I'm a member of the International Association of Chiefs and Police, but I don't care about being on boards and commissions,” Rollins said. “I want to be able to run a department where I can empower people to run the department. I don't like top-down leadership. I've never enjoyed that. And I know a lot of leaders say that and they don't practice it. And it's on me to prove that that's what I want to do here. But I wanted a city that was going to allow that.”

Because of combination of location, concentration of residents, and the proximity to adjoining cities, Rollins says it's important to keep a consistent police presence in Castle Hills.

“I do expect my officers to be present in Castle Hills and to be visible and seen,” he said. “I want the residents to know they can see police, and so that's generally been the assignment. I don't expect that to reduce any time soon.”

Residents' concerns are at the forefront for officers on the Castle Hills beat, and much of that focus is channeled into traffic enforcement. As a result, Rollins hopes to educate residents on what's allowed and how police handle the lion's share of complaints that come in.

“Castle Hills experiences about half the amount of rate of crime than the rest of the city and also has about twice as many police officers assigned to it than the rest of the city,” he said. “It makes sense to have an officer in the northeast sector of the city available to respond to calls. Not just in Castle Hills, but being available out there, there is development that is way beyond Castle Hills out there that these officers are accountable to.”

Additionally, he said, with the convergence of two major highways, traffic behavior and vehicle crashes require nearby police presence at all times.

“We have to spread the resources we have as best we can, and at the end of the day, I have to provide policing resources to the entire city, right? So I've got to be fair and impartial with how that's being done. It needs to be equitable.

I can't have one neighborhood over off Edmonds that receives less police presence than Castle Hills.”

No matter what, Rollins says, his door is open. Whether he’s behind it may be another question, however, because he makes every effort to spend time in each division as much as possible

“My phone number and my address have been published to my entire department. If you need something, just come talk to me. And I say all that to say that I believe that there's going to be more for us to learn. And if we're out learning it instead of just listening to what people are saying, what I've learned is ‘Sure, we're busy, but we really do have good coverage,’” he said.

Keeping Your Community Safe

Citizen involvement is key in creating a safe, informed community, and the Lewisville Police Department offers a number of ways to keep residents in the loop.

Chief of Police Brook Rollins says one way to help your neighbors is simply introducing yourself.

“Best thing for our residents is to go out and meet your neighbors, all of them, and introduce yourself and say ‘hello’. And that is the best thing. That's one of the best parts about where we live that I like,” he says.

“We're all connected. Everybody knows each other. You don't have to be in my private business, I just know who you are, that's all.”

This is particularly helpful when you’re heading out of town or having work done on your home.

For those looking to level up their involvement, LPD invites citizens to ride along with a police officer. This gives them the opportunity to see the day-to-day patrol in real time. Additionally, going forward Rollins hopes to host community forums that will allow residents to raise their own concerns and get information straight from the source.

Currently, residents have the chance to sign up for the annual Citizen's Police Academy (CPA) where they can get firsthand knowledge of what police officers do in weekly classes from Sept. 5-Nov. 7. Through education in multiple topics ranging from K-9 program, Crisis Negotiations, S.W.A.T., Criminal Investigations, Narcotics and more, the program seeks to improve the relationships between residents and police.

Graduates can join the CPA Alumni Association and be considered for participation in Citizens On Patrol – the volunteer program managed by citizens that provides the police with extra eyes and ears through patrolling activities.

“I wouldn't be able to run this department without my volunteers, the people that just donate time with the police department,” Rollins said. The fall session will meet from 9 a.m. to noon every Thursday at Lewisville City Hall. More CPA opportunities for bilingual residents and those with time constraints are in the works.
